

THE HENDRIX FAMILY

TO ENGLAND

November 2025

Last November we spent time talking with people we've met in our town about Thanksgiving and some of the traditions surrounding the holiday. Since Thanksgiving isn't celebrated here, we decided to bake pumpkin pies and deliver them around town. We watched the Lord use those simple gestures to open doors, deepen relationships, and create opportunities for meaningful conversations. Because of that, we decided to make and deliver pies again this year. It was a lot of work, but it was also a lot of fun — a sweet way to encourage the people we love and care for so deeply.

This year, however, we took Thanksgiving one step further and hosted a traditional Thanksgiving meal in our home. We invited several friends, and our house was full. After a busy week of baking and cooking, seeing our dining room and kitchen filled with people God has brought into our lives over the past year was incredibly special. Watching Hadleigh chat happily with some of the ladies, and seeing Beau proudly eat a turkey leg before settling in to play Lego with one of the guys — it all did my heart so much good.

After eating far too much, we enjoyed a long evening together. When most of the guests had left, a couple stayed behind for a while. I told Callie I sensed that one of them — someone who has attended Bible study several times — had wanted to talk but didn't get the chance. Later I messaged him, and his response was such a reminder of God's desire to save and His continued work in hearts. Part of what he wrote was this: "I've been thinking more about Christianity recently, and I'm not sure what I should be doing in order to try and help me on my journey of understanding."

We texted back and forth for a bit, and now we're planning to meet one on one to talk more. This is the same man I've mentioned in previous letters, and I truly believe he is close to calling on Christ as his Savior. Please continue praying for him. I can't wait for the day — and I believe it's coming soon — when I get to write and tell you that he has placed his faith in Christ.

For God's Glory,
