

Lotte Lieb Dula Bio

Lotte Lieb Dula, retired financial strategist, is the great granddaughter of Charles Clark Welch, Colorado pioneer, territorial legislator, and a founder of the Colorado School of Mines. After her mother died, Lotte began to go through boxes of family ephemera; she found evidence of slaveholding in a ledger book that detailed plantation holdings in Mississippi. After researching her genealogy and reaching out to other descendants of slaveholders, Lotte joined Coming To The Table, a grassroots national group that brings together descendants of enslavers and descendants of the enslaved to work toward racial healing. Lotte has committed to making reparations for her family's role in enslaving Africans. She is the founder of www.reparations4slavery.com, a portal for white families wishing to walk the path of racial healing through making reparations. Lotte serves on Coming To The Table's Reparations Working Group, convenes the Denver chapter of Coming To The Table, and is a founding donor of The Denver Foundation's Reparations Fund.

Colorado Public Radio Story: After Two White Colorado Women Unearthed The History Of Their Slave-Owning Ancestors, They Turned To Reparations